In 10 Things Kids Will Never Learn In School: What Parents Should Know, author and educator John Taylor Gatto exposes the shocking truth about the American education system.

Gatto argues that our schools are failing our children by teaching them only what they need to know to be obedient workers and consumers. He says that our schools are not preparing our children for the real world, and that they are actually stifling their creativity and curiosity.

Gatto offers a compelling alternative to the traditional school system. He believes that children should learn through experience, play, and exploration. He says that children should be encouraged to ask questions, think critically, and solve problems.

Gatto's book is a must-read for any parent who is concerned about the quality of their child's education. It is a wake-up call for all of us to rethink the way we educate our children.

Here are just a few of the things that your kids will never learn in school:

- How to think critically

- How to solve problems

- How to be creative

- How to be independent

- How to be responsible

- How to be compassionate

- How to be a good citizen

- How to live a happy and fulfilling life

These are all essential skills for life in the 21st century. But sadly, our schools are not teaching them.

If you want your children to succeed in life, you need to supplement their education with these essential life skills.

10 Things Kids Will Never Learn In School: What Parents Should Know is the perfect place to start.
