For photographer John Smith, the Wind River Range has been a lifelong obsession. For over two decades, he has ventured into this untamed wilderness with his camera, capturing the raw beauty and serene landscapes that define the region.

In his new book, 'Life Above 7000 Feet in Wyoming,' Smith shares a collection of his most stunning photographs, taken from high atop the range's towering peaks. Through his lens, we witness the dramatic changes in weather and the interplay of light and shadow that paint the mountains in a kaleidoscope of colors.

This book is more than just a collection of beautiful images. It is a testament to the indomitable spirit of the human explorer and the awe-inspiring power of nature. A Photographer's Journey

Smith's journey into the Wind River Range began in his early twenties when he first laid eyes on the towering peaks from a distance. He was immediately captivated by their beauty and knew that he had to explore them further.

Over the years, Smith has spent countless hours hiking, camping, and climbing in the range. He has witnessed the sunrise from the summit of Gannett Peak, the highest point in Wyoming, and watched the sunset over the shimmering waters of Lake Solitude.

Through his photography, Smith strives to share his love of the Wind River Range with others. He wants people to experience the same sense of awe and inspiration that he feels when he is in the mountains.

"The Wind River Range is a place of pure beauty and wonder," says Smith. "It is a place where I can escape the stresses of everyday life and connect with the natural world. I hope that my photographs will inspire others to explore this amazing region and experience its magic for themselves."
