In Working Robert Caro, Robert Gottlieb provides an unauthorized biography of the master of investigative journalism. The book provides a glimpse into Caro's life and work, from his early days as a young reporter to his rise to become one of the most celebrated historians of our time.

Caro's Early Life and Career

Robert Caro was born in 1935 in New York City. He graduated from Princeton University in 1957 and began his career as a reporter for The New York Times. In 1964, he left the Times to write a biography of Robert Moses, the powerful New York City planner.

Caro spent seven years researching and writing The Power Broker, which was published in 1974. The book was a critical and commercial success, and it won the Pulitzer Prize for Biography. Caro's next book, The Years of Lyndon Johnson, was published in four volumes between 1982 and 2012. The book won the Pulitzer Prize for History in 1983, and it is considered one of the definitive biographies of the 36th president of the United States.

Caro's Writing Process

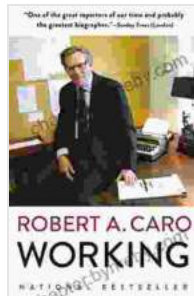

Caro is known for his meticulous research and his vivid storytelling. He spends years interviewing his subjects and their associates, and he reads thousands of documents to gather information. Caro's writing process is also slow and deliberate. He often spends months or even years writing and rewriting a single chapter.

Caro's slow and deliberate writing process can be frustrating for readers who are eager to learn more about his subjects. However, Caro's attention to detail and his commitment to accuracy have earned him the respect of critics and historians alike.
